Wilkie Creek is located within the Western Downs Regional Council, approximately 40 kilometres west of Dalby and approximately 12 kilometres west of Macalister township in south-east Queensland. Wilkie Creek was an open cut mine producing low sulphur, low nitrogen, and lower emissions thermal coal. At the end of 2013, Peabody announced the cessation of coal mining operations.

As operations advance, mined land is progressively rehabilitated to pasture for the post mining land use of grazing. This process has been undertaken in collaboration with neighbouring landholders, including shared discussions in relation to the levelling and reshaping of the final landform, soil quality and appropriate pasture.

As of 31 December 2018, 612 hectares of Wilkie Creek’s disturbance had been rehabilitated. This represents 100% of land available for rehabilitation. Peabody’s efforts were later recognised, on 8 February 2019, with 86.67 hectares of rehabilitated land was certified by the Queensland Government.
